

June 2, 2009

Randall Eaton is a gifted and inspirational storyteller and speaker. Whether in front of 90 undergraduate seniors or mentoring young adults in a sacred hunt, Randall's energy is powerful and his presence is captivating. Even six months after his visit to the University of Vermont my students still reference his talk and describe it as one of the most influential of their undergraduate careers.

During a recent visit to Vermont he covered all kinds of territory; lecturing to upper level natural resource students, offering a well-attended public talk on hunting as rite of passage, and co-facilitating a weekend workshop on the sacred hunt. As one participant described the experience: "Absolutely life altering. I am so honored to have been there."

Matt Kolan, Lecturer, Rubenstein School of Environment and Natural Resources, University of Vermont
mkolan@uvm.edu