

February 6, 2009

Everyone I have talked to since your lecture has been very enthusiastic. And that is true of faculty, students and community members. It was not only your lecture that was appreciated, but your willingness to speak to classes, the extra time you took to give TV and radio interviews, and the sincerity and importance of your message.

In a conversation with one of our faculty members about a week after your visit, he said that what he appreciated most about your presentation was your curiosity, your engagement with the world of ideas, that set an example for our students that transcended your intended message: you showed our students what it is like to live a life committed to hunting ideas wherever they make take you.

Richard Kyte, Ph.D., Director
Reinhart Institute for Ethics in Leadership
Viterbo University
608-796-3704
rlkyte@viterbo.edu